Case Report

Methemoglobinemia is a rare condition that requires thorough investigation of a patient’s medical history to identify potential exposure to anesthetic medications. In this case, a pharmacist identified an OTC medication as the agent responsible for the patient’s disorder. This case demonstrates the importance of including OTC medications as part of a patient’s medication review as they are commonly overlooked by healthcare professionals.

References

Contact

Authors have no conflicts of interest to disclose
For clarification, we can be reached at zaf9@scarletmail.rutgers.edu

Marc Storb, Pharm.D., Natalie Millet, D.O., Arpita Sammons, Pharm.D., Puja Trivedi, Pharm.D., Joseph Reilly, Pharm.D., Frances Loftus, D.O.

AtlantiCare Regional Medical Center, Pomona, N.J.